SALES AND MARKETING SUCCESS

THE PROCESS

Sales and marketing are ongoing efforts that can be continuously improved.

We use this process to get maximum results from minimum resources.

PROSPECT

The good news - we already have a pretty good idea of who in our industry are good prospects for various aviation products and services.

The bad news - those people know about your competition, but may not have not have heard of you yet.

Here's Why -

Your competitors have invested considerable time and resources into getting found on the web.

This means that when people are looking online for the specific terms or keywords about your product or service, do they find you, or them?

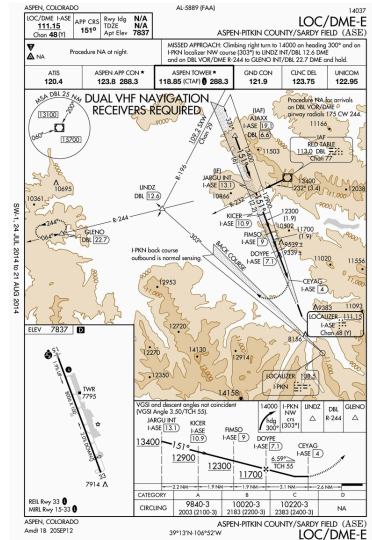

78% of all buyers of B2B products and services begin their buying process on Google.

APPROACH

Just as when you're approaching an airport that's new to you, it's a good idea to do some research before approaching a valuable prospect and making a first impression.

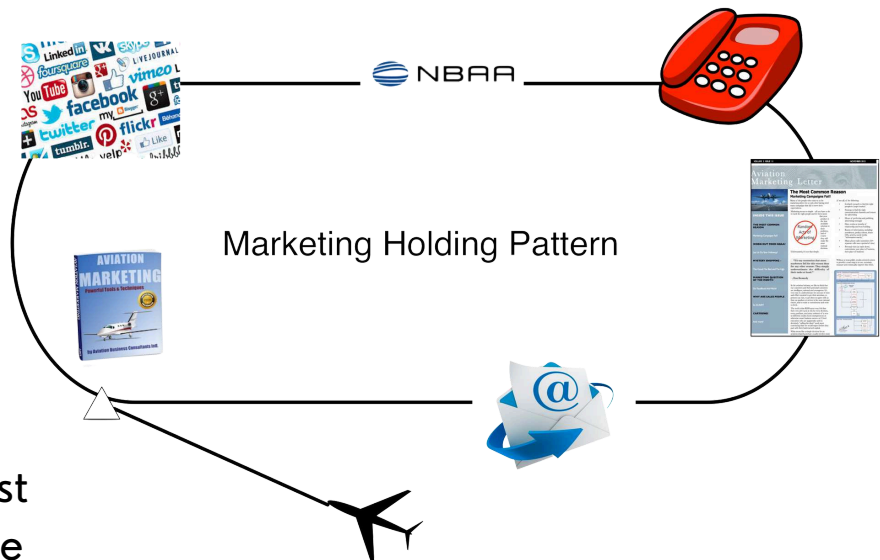

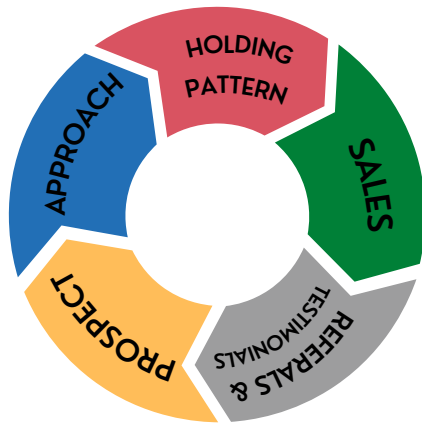

Research to do before contacting a prospect can include:

- Are they a qualified prospect? (Do they have the money, authority and need to contract with you?)
- Does anyone at your company have history with this prospect?
- Does this prospect have history with any of your competitors?
- What are the advantages of your offer that are most likely to appeal to them?
- How do they like to be approached? (Phone? LinkedIn? At an event?)
- What information is most to be the most influential with them?
- How can we be certain we look like the most attractive option so they are most likely to choose us?

Approaches are critical to successful sales. They should be made with preparation and care. You competition will!

HOLDING PATTERN

Even the best and most qualified prospects are often unwilling or unable to consummate a sale immediately.

They may need to wait for their next batch of pilots or planes, wait for scheduling availability, or wait for a budget to be approved. These things can take weeks or months.

During that time, of course, your prospects are being approached by competitors with attractive offers. We need to provide ongoing contact and new information to keep the relationship fresh and current so they choose you when they are able.

SALES

Once the prospect is ready, willing and able to engage you, there are often remaining items to be resolved.

Handling questions and objections, negotiating options, and making final preparations for a high-quality onboarding experience are far more time-consuming than often anticipated.

Many potentially lucrative deals will "fall apart" at this stage if it's not handled correctly!

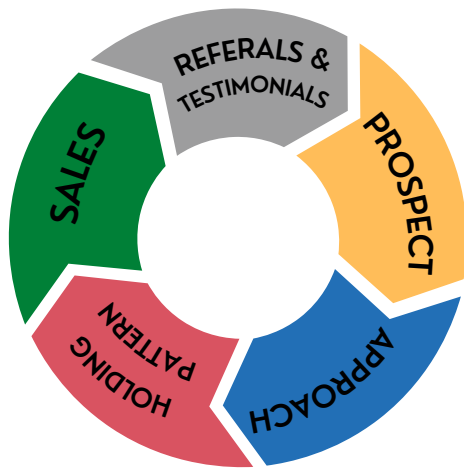

Many phone calls, emails, and texts are often exchanged during the weeks up to, during and immediately after the sale.

If these are not handled promptly and correctly, the client may get "cold feet" and begin looking at alternatives.

ABCI's Aviation Sales Fundamentals Course will ensure your salespeople are ready for this challenge.

REFERRALS & TESTIMONIALS

Aviation is a small world.

And most of the money in the aviation industry is made AFTER the initial sale.

Why?

Because repeat business and referrals are MUCH easier to acquire and serve than initial contracts with a first-time customer.

- Referred clients know what to expect.
- They are predisposed to enjoy and appreciate the experience because of their association with the person who referred them.
- The transaction usually occurs faster, with less information and negotiation required.
- A testimonial from a current client is by FAR the most effective advertising tool in our industry.

These are reasons we make a great referral and testimonial system part of our sales process.

Pricing

- Every client is different. Our job is to make the best use of the resources you already have to ensure you're getting maximum leverage to meet your sales.
- Every month is different. Our first focus may be on your website, the next the biggest priority may be preparing materials for a trade show. We meet monthly so that we can adapt that month's focus to accommodate seasonal changes and shifts in your business priorities.
- Not all clients will need, or use, ALL of these services. Our intention is to provide a convenient way to provide the services you need.
- These service levels are intended to provide maximum value for your investment, based on our experience with many aviation clients over the past 20 years.
